SYNOPSIS

Stones by Tom Lycos and Stefo Nantsou is a gripping, high-impact youth theatre production based on real events. What begins as a seemingly harmless prank between two boys - aged 13 and 15 - spirals into irreversible tragedy when a stone thrown from a bridge causes a fatal accident.

The performance confronts the audience with urgent questions about responsibility, peer pressure, consequences, and moral choice. Told with raw intensity and emotional precision, the piece does not offer easy answers; instead, it invites young audiences to reflect, question, and engage in dialogue - within themselves and with their peers, teachers, and families.

Beyond its theatrical power, Stones has a clear social relevance, contributing to prevention, awareness, and the development of empathy, both on and beyond the stage.
